rests in Clarendon's Citizens Cem-etery was honored Monday during special Memorial Day services.

Members of the Plemons-Shelby Camp 464 of The Sons of the Confederate Veterans, dressed in authentic uniforms and arms and recognized the service of the late Peru Hardy Benson during the War Between the States.

Camp Commander Mike Moore of Amarillo addressed those Mike in attendance and gave a short history of the causes of session and factors leading to the downfall of the South. He noted that slavery was not the only cause of the Civil War and drew attention to unfair taxes levied on the South by the Northern controlled Congress.

Moore also discussed the different heritages of Confederate

Confederate soldier who soldiers including those of Mexican, Nova Scotian, and Cherokee descent, and he said the South and the nation had come a long ways in terms of people getting along with each other.

Moore himself said he is a liberal Democrat who believes Barack Obama to be the smartest US president behind only Thomas Jefferson. He noted that the Sons of the Confederate Veterans is gain-ing black members who, through intermarriage are descended from Confederate soldiers, and later said that the Plemons-Shelby Camp has about 30 members which includes three Democrats, an atheist, and an agnostic.

Benson was a Prisoner of War who spent two years in Yankee prisons and was among a group of Confederates who became known as the "Immortal Six Hundred" because of the number who survived deliber-ate starvation, exposure to freezing weather, lack of sanitation, lack of medical care, physical abuse by the guards, and imprisonment in the line of fire.

Moore said in his memoirs. Benson wrote that he and his fellow captives were fed mush with worms in it and that a friend once counted more than 70 worms in a half pint of mush before he quit counting and started eating before the worms got it all.

"Mr. Benson was brave and literate and a credit to his community and the South," Moore said. Following the war, Benson settled in Hall County where he died on October 14, 1906. His family still owns some of property he set tled near Brice, and his grandson,

C.L. Benson, lives in Clarendon

Moore said many former Con-federates settled in the southeast Panhandle and joint reunions with Rebels and Yankees were common in Clarendon and Memphis for many years before they were moved to Amarillo in 1950s.

Monday's service was closed with a 21-gun salute from the mus-kets of the Confederate descendants.

Earlier in the day, the Plemons Shelby Camp attended a Memorial Day service hosted by the American Legion Post in Hedley, which was scheduled to be in Rowe Cemetery but was moved to the Lions Club building due to high winds. A separate Memorial Day service was held at the same time in Clarendon at the Donley County War Memorial by members of the Veterans of Foreign Wars Post.

Don't discount a GOP outsider for president

By Martin Frost

The departure of Mike Huckabee Mitch Daniels and Donald Trump from the Republican presidential field presents a classic dilemma for the GOP. Does the party nominate an insider like Mitt Romney? Or opt for an outsider like former Minnesota Gov. Tim the p Pawlenty, former Utah Goy, Jon Huntsman or some other player to be named later?

Outsiders have great appeal in the current unsettled political climate. It's as if the public doesn't trust anyone who has been a part of national politics. Barack Obama was the definition of an outsider (racial minority with little federal experience) when he won the Democratic nomination in 2008.

In fact, the past three Democratic presidents Jimmy Carter, Bill Clinton and Obama - were all outsiders.

In the current GOP field, Huntsman is the classic outsider — with little name recognition and no time in Congress. Pawlenty also qualifies. Minnesota Rep. Michele Bachmann, though in Congress, rates because of her extreme politics. But it's doubtful she could be a serious candidate.

Sarah Palin, forever the consummate outsider, could stir things up if she decides to run. Newt Gingrich looks like a consummate insider - though he has been out of office for more than a decade and is now playing the role of crazy uncle in the attic.

The GOP nominee may well ultimately lose to Obama. However, from my personal experience, the outsider makes the more interesting candidate - particularly when your party is not favored to win. As a veteran of close to 40 years of Democratic presidential nominating politics, I have some sense of what outsiders like Pawlenty and Huntsman may face. Pawlenty must do a straddle — remain fresh and new, while attracting enough establishment money to be le against Romney. One classic successful straddle was Carter's 1976 viable campaign. He was an outsider but attracted enough establishment money to win the crucial Pennsylvania primary - and wrap up the nomination.

Sen. John McCain's 2000 race was an unsuccess ful straddle. He was swamped by Bush money in the critical South Carolina primary and lost any realistic chance at the nomination. Huntsman's problem is a little different. He risks being too moderate for the GOP primary electorate. He has personal money to remain viable but could be savaged on social issues by a candidate like Bachmann who has no chance of winning but could prove the timate spoiler. Huntsman's message people will have their hands full.

My involvement in Democratic presidential politics began in 1975. As a young attorney in Dallas, I went to the AFL-CIO state convention to hear the presidential prospects. We were seeking to find an opponent for President Gerald Ford, who took office following Richard Nixon's resignation. I walked out thinking that an obscure former Georgia governor - Carter - made the most sense. Virtually everyone I knew in Texas thought I was crazy. Most backed Texas Sen. Lloyd Bentsen. But I helped organize North Texas for Carter. He won the and I was a delegate to the Democratic mary National Convention.

It was the year of the outsider — and Carter was in the right place at the right time.

Eight years later, I supported another outsider -Sen. Gary Hart — as his Texas state chairman. I was with him in New Hampshire when he won the primary. That year, the ultimate insider, former Vice President Walter Mondale, outlasted Hart and won the nomina-tion. But he lost badly to President Ronald Reagan, a former outsider running for reelection

In 1988, I liked a little-known Washington insider, Rep. Dick Gephardt. I ran his campaign in Wapello County – where he won the largest majority while carrying the Iowa caucuses. But he ran out of steam and money and lost the nomination to Massa setts Gov Michael Dukakis. He was no match for Lee Atwater's campaign machine, however, and lost to

Vice President George H.W. Bush. Four years later, I endorsed my friend — the quixotic Nebraska Sen. Bob Kerry. I didn't heed my Arkansas cousin, who kept touting his little-known governor, Clinton. He won the nomination and, in a smartly run campaign, the presidency.

By 2000, I finally stopped looking for the perfect outsider and joined my Democratic friends in sup-porting Vice President Al Gore, who ran a strong, if ultimately unsuccessful, race against a Washingt outsider, Texas Gov. George W. Bush.

So what's the relevance of all this Democratic politics to this GOP race? Republicans have usually been successful with insiders — Bush 41 comes to mind. However, they also have won with outsiders like Reagan.

History is an interesting teacher. I would imagine GOP primary and caucus participants will be studying some over the next year.

Former Texas Rep. Martin Frost served from 1979 to 2005. He was Democratic Caucus chairman and head of the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee. He is now an attorney with Polsinelii Shughart.

gles and desert and years living in refugee camps with minimal rations. These were the "Lost Boys of Sudan." When the Second Sudanese Civil War broke out in 1983, thousands of boys from the predominately Chris-tian southern Sudan were sent running from their family homes and villages to escape a likely death at the hands of Khartoum forces from the North, who targeted young males in an attempt to np out a new generation of rebel star fight

Thousands of these displaced young boys found each other in the jungle and banded together to seek safe harbor. They began a journey with no real leader and no clear direction, but a common goal of escaping death. Those who managed to survive the daunting conditions - a lack of food and water, disease, and attacks by lions, hyenas, and other wild animals at night - headed south until they eventually reached Ethiopia, where they stayed in a makeshift camp until that nation, too, broke out in civil war in 1991. On the move again, the boys made their way to Kenya, where they were told they could finally find refuge. This meant crossing through southern Sudan once more, facing the threat of attacks by Khartoum forces and a continued lack of provisions. Perhaps the most terrifying hurdle was crossing the Gilo River, which separates southwestern Ethiopia from Sudan. Some horrific accounts depict younger boys clinging to those who knew how to swim as they crossed.

times Nations camp in northern Kenya. Rations were meager-often only one meal a day—but education was provided. Many of the boys learned English, not knowing at the time just how valuable those lessons would prove. One journalist dubbed them the "Lost Boys" after the group of orphans in Peter Pan, and while it's not a nickname they necessarily like, it stuck. In 2001, after many of the boys had spent nearly nine years at the camp, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees recommended about 3,800 of the Lost Boys for resettlement in the United States. An agreement was reached with the U.S. government and the resettlement process ensued. Today, there are Lost Boys living in nearly 40 cities across the country. In Dallas, a network of churches, charities and volunteer organizations have helped the 130 Lost Boys who settled there to attend school, find jobs and secure living arrangements. Highland Park Presbyte rian Church, for example, has funded 80 percent of the tuition costs for the Lost Boys living in Dallas. To date, a majority of the Lost Boys who settled in Dallas have become U.S. citizens. I was proud to participate in a naturalization ceremony several years ago during which several of these young men became

I recently had the chance to meet vith a group of Dallas' Lost Boys. Today, these young men are far from "lost," with college degrees and quality jobs under their belts, but many of them still long for home and the families they upper formatic to how at two her such a were forced to leave at such a young age. Some of have been able to locate and reconnect with their families; others are still looking. Several of them told me of their passion for human rights and their desire to return to Sudan, to provide relief to refugees and further the cause of peace there.

I couldn't have been more impressed with these young men, who have overcome unspeakable tragedy and insurmountable odds. They are intelligent, grounded, thoughtful individuals who keep their focus on the future and how they can make the world a better place. They have been through more hardship than many of us can even imagine, and yet they have a positive spirit about them that is contagious and inspiring.

As they commemorate the 10th versary of their arrival in Dallas, I wish this particular group and all of the Lost Boys of Sudan the very best. And I applaud the efforts of the many generous Texans and Americans who have helped them resettle and find opportunity. We have a long way to go toward peace in Sudan, and I hope the story of the Los Boys will continue to inspire us to reach that goal.

High-stakes Medicare showdown

By Dr. Mark W. Hendricks

The trustees of the Medicare syste recently reported that the program will go broke in the year 2024—five years sooner than was projected just last year. The millions of Americans who have been counting on Medicare to be a reliable, stable guarantor of affordable healthcare in their senior years should be asking themselves, "Who is responsible for this predicament?" The short answer is "lots of people," but let's start by look-ing in the mirror. The shameful status of Medicare brings to mind a sequence in the movie "Animal House." A freshman pledge, Flounder, let some upperclassmen in the fraternity use his brother's brand-new Lincoln for a road trip. Naturally, the brothers trashed the car. As Flounder wept in regret, the suave, smooth-talking senior, Otter, put his arm around Flounder's shoulder and explained the facts of life to him: "You [goof]ed up; you trusted us." ("Goof" replaces the original R-rated verb.)

"We the people" have goofed up big time, trusting a government bureaucracy to oversee our healthcare.

to oversee our heatticarc. When will we learn that gigantic bureaucracies—undisciplined by the profit-motive and insulated from the normal competitive pressures of the marketplace-are inherently inefficient? And when will a majority of Ameri-cans take a sober look at Uncle Sam's track record and recognize his chronic incompetence? Consider: Government meddling, abetted by misregulation and a compliant Federal Reserve, generated the housing bubble/bust that has caused the market value of most Americans' most valuable asset their home-to decline, plunging millions into negative equity. Chronic federal overspending has impelled a weaker currency and higher prices of daily necessities.

The quackery of government stimu-lus spending has produced anemic economic growth; the usual result when the ent share of a country's GDP gover dramatically expands. The government-run Social Security Administration will henceforth operate in permanent deficit—a grotesque malfeasance that would have resulted in the imprisonment of private executives who perpetrated such a swindle. With a record like this, how could anyone trust government to get it right on healthcare? The big question now is: Why are so many Americans opposed to Congressman Paul Ryan's attempt to put Medicare on sounder financial footing?

Part of the resistance to fixing Medicare may be simple partisan loy-alty—i.e., Republicans are the enemy; oppose everything they propose.

Part of it may be fear of change. Part of it may be the seductive belief of "the free lunch" and a corresponding belief that Congress simply has to raise taxes on somebody else to obtain necessary funds. Part of it may be that Americans believe, "We paid for it, so it's ours."

Well, yes, we've been paying for Medi-care via payroll deductions for decades, but no, our promised benefits remain unfunded due to government misman agement. (We goofed up; we trusted

Part of it may be what economists call "short time horizons"-that is, focusing on the short run instead of the long run. Many seniors tend to do this. So do many politicians with their fixation on the next election. In economics short-time horizons are highly correlated with poverty; in other words, ignoring the long term is why many people are

Many of those on the extreme left oppose reforming Medicare for another reason entirely: they desire a state-run monopoly of healthcare. They prefer a socialized healthcare model. To attain that goal, the left needs to merely block reforms to Medicare. Gridlock and stale mate will assure Medicare's eventual bankruptcy and therefore its subsequent nationalization (a la Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac)

Early polls show stiff resistance Congressman Paul Ryan's proposed Medicare reforms. If the Republicans can sell the public on the need for reform, then Medicare's solvency may be prolonged. If the public repudiates Ryan's plan by returning a Democratic majority to the House while re-electing Barack Obama to the White House, then a government takeover of the healthcare dustry is all but assured

The stakes in the next election are enormous. The Medicare reform contest could be the one for all the marbles. — Dr. Mark W. Hendrickson is an adjunct faculty member, economist, and fellow for economic and social policy with The Center for Vision & Values at Grove City College.

The Clarendon Enterprise

CC announces the addition of NJCAA men's golf

Under the direction of newly appointed Athletic Director John Green, Clarendon College announces that the college will participate in NJCAA Men's Golf starting the Fall 2011

The Clarendon College Board of Regents has approved the new sports addition and the NJCAA has accepted the college's request and approved Clarendon College for intercollegiate play starting immediately. The team will be coached by highly successful junior college golf program. In four years, Coach Green had four nationally ranked squads qualifying for the NJCAA National Golf Tournament and finishing in the Top 20 in the nation all four years. The successes of the golfers under Green's program have been recruited by many high profile programs across the United States.

Coach Green is known for recruiting the best talent around the world and has elevated and promoted numerous players to universi ties ranging from DI to NAIA level. Coach Green is busy recruiting and has verbal commitments from two golfers from United Kingdom.

Alex Palomeque and Jake Bond from England as well as Chris Fletcher, a transfer from California who also hails from England, are processing the paperwork to join the Bulldog golf squad. Coach Green is eager to hear

The college has already started recruiting a team for this upcoming season. the team. Recruiting will continue throughout the summer until the 15 er squad is filled. The Clarendon College golf player team will compete in 10 of the most prestigious tournaments across the Texas/New Mexico area. Green expects the team to immediately step into the national spotlight and be ranked in the Top 20 in the nation. "I am confident the team will be selected to compete in the NJCAA nal Golf Tournament in the Fall Nat 2012," Green said.

The Bulldog golf program will be the 9th program featured at Clarendon College. The sports include Volleyball, Baseball, Soft-ball, Men's and Women's Cross Country, Men's and Women's Bas-ketball, and Rodeo. Also under the athletic department competitive teams are the Livestock and Meats Judging Teams and the Ranch Horse Team. Supporting the teams is a dynamic Cheerleader Squad.

For parents wondering what their daughter will do for fun this summer, Girl Scouts offers a variety of summer camps for various ages. Registration for day, resident and high adventure trips is under way. Girls do not initially have to be a Girl Scout to register for camp. This year, traditional offerings of Resident Camp will be available, such as horseback riding, swimming, canoeing, ropes course and archery, in addition to several new offerings such as cooking and art.

Resident Camp will be held at Camp Timberlake (near Azle), Camp Kiwanis (near Amarillo) and Stevens Ranch (near Glenrose). Sessions start at $80 per camper for a weekend session and up to $800 for a multi-week

camp for older girls ready to take on leadership roles. High Adventure Trips, for girls

12 years and up, focus on girls get-ting out and exploring the wilder-ness. In June, the campers will brave the rapids, whitewater rafting in the Colorado mountains or head to the week backpacking through the wilderness. Caving and Zip lining are on the schedule for July with scouts exploring the caves under the Guadalupe Mountains or heading to Austin to ride through the trees.

Trips last six days and range in cost from $400 to $500. "Girl Scouts believes it is important to offer a fun, familyfriendly summer camp experience for every girl," said Natalie Stephen-son, Director of Outdoor Education for the local council, Girl Scouts of Texas Oklahoma Plains. "The ses-

While girls do not have to be a Girl Scout to go to camp, they will be required to join Girl Scouts upon registering for camp. This will add $12 membership to the camp registration fee.

Lions Ashlee Estlack and Monty Hysinger gave updates on college and public school activities.

The club received several applications for the position of Sweetheart next year, and three finalists will be asked to attend next week's meeting.

Our current Sweethearts reported on their plans now that they have graduated from high school. Kaleigh West and Annie Patten will both be attending Clarendon College, and Ashlyn Tubbs will be going to Texas Tech.

The flags were not put out on Memorial Day due to the Boss Lion not getting the proper information to the flag committee and also due to the wind. The club will select Patriots Day – September 11 as a make-up day for the flag service. Plans were begun for Cow Patty

AgriLife provides fire evacuation tips

The Texas AgriLife Extension family heirlooms to be ready to leave Service has released the following tips that could be very valuable in the event of wildfire requiring people to evacuate their homes. The plan, "Ready, Set, Go," includes the following suggestions: READY. Prepare for the possibility of a wildland fire before the threat occurs. Take preventive actions to make your home safer from the threat of wildfire by using Firewise and similar principles (firewise.org). Remove combustible materials from around your home.

Keep grass mowed short. SET. Elevate your fam-ily's awareness when fire weather occurs or when wildland fire activity increases. Form a family disaster plan.

Agree on an evacuation plan that includes what to do if you get separated and where you'll go in case of evacuation. Pack critical medicines, important documents, at a moment's notice. GO. This is the simplest step: Execute your disaster plan by leaving early, well before the fire arrives. If instructed to evacuate, do so! Your "stuff" isn't more important than your life.

Other tips can help protect your home and property from disas-ter. Wildfire can strike home if you have not taken some steps to protect your house and property. The actions and precautions listed below are Have fire tools handy such as: designed to help you prepare your ladder long enough to reach your home and lessen the threat of wild-land fire damage to you and your away from buildings for valves to be shut off in case of fire. Keep area around the tank clear of flammable vegetation.

Store gasoline in an approved safety can away from occupied buildings.

All combustibles such as firewood, wooden picnic tables, boats and stacked lumber should be kept away from structures.

Clear roof surfaces and gutters regularly to avoid build-up of flam-mable materials such as leaves and other debris. Remove branches from trees to a height of 15 feet or more. In rural areas, clear a fuel break roof, shovel, rake and a bucket or two for water. Place connected garden hoses property. Place connected garden hoses LPG tanks should be far enough at all sides of your home for emergency use.
