Study examines cotton production methods

VERNON – Loss of production may be one concern cotton producers have on the Rolling Plains when considering switching to reduced- or no-tillage systems, said Dr. Paul DeLaune, Texas AgriLife Research environmental soil scientist in Vernon.

Not only will cotton growers not lose production with subsurface drip irrigation, their economics will improve, according to DeLaune's latest research article that will appear in the July-August issue of Agronomy Journal.

DeLaune's study on cotton production as affected by irrigation level and transitioning tillage systems was designed to identify water management strategies that conserve and protect water resources within semiarid environments.

"We found that tillage has no impact on yields, the net returns are greater and, because we can deficit irrigate, we can save energy and water," he said.

The three-year study included five irrigation regimes, from 0 percent to 133 percent of evapotranspiration replacement, and evaluated four tillage systems — conventional till, reduced till, no-till and no-till with a terminated cover crop, he said. Treatments were replicated three times in a randomized complete block design.

The results showed lint yields were not affected by tillage or the interaction of tillage and evapotranspiration replacement, DeLaune said.

The greatest lint yields and net returns were achieved at 100 percent evapotranspiration replacement. Optimum lint yields and net returns were achieved at 104.5 percent evapotranspiration and 102 percent evapotranspiration, respectively.

However, he said the models showed that producers could irrigate at 83 percent evapotranspiration and maintain optimum yields. The net returns were significantly higher for no-till systems compared with conventional till because of reduced labor and inputs.

"We concluded the adoption of conservation tillage systems should not negatively affect lint yield or net returns in deficit-irrigated subsurface drip irrigation cotton systems within the Rolling Plains, particularly during the transition from intensively tilled systems to conservation tilled systems."

While only 16 percent of planted cotton is irrigated in the Rolling Plains, irrigation accounts for 41 percent of the harvested cotton, DeLaune said. In such environments, it is important to determine management practices that conserve or best use water resources.

Saturday to be 7th Trash to Treasures

Bargain shoppers will be in for a treat during the seventh annual "Trash to Treasures" garage sale event to be held in Clarendon and nearby communities this Saturday, June 2.

Twenty-one individual sales are scheduled to be held. A complete description of each sale is printed on the official Treasure Map located on the last page of this week's Enterprise.

From a tractor to a Texaco light, this weekend's sales will feature hundreds of treasures just waiting to be uncovered at bargain prices.

Other items included in this year's sales are leather recliners, a hot tub, books, a piano, a Maytag washer, and more.

"Trash to Treasures" is being promoted with advertising dollars in area communities; and many people from neighboring counties attend.

After visiting all the sales, hungry shoppers are urged to stop by sale number 21 where the Assembly of God Youth Group will be having a hamburger lunch from 11 a.m. til the food runs out.

Trash to Treasures is organized by THE CLARENDON ENTERPRISE as a service to the community.

Kids' College begins at CC next Monday

There will be more than 20 classes offered in the month of June for kids age 5-15.

"We have a wide variety of classes for kids this summer, and we've set things up so that even kids who go on vacation can still hopefully attend a portion of the offerings," CC Marketing Coordinator Ashlee Estlack said. "We love offering Kids' College as a way for kids to learn in a fun environment right here at home."

This year's courses feature popular returners from last year including Let's Have a Tea Party, Take Home a Pet Tornado, Erupt a Volcano, and Make an Ocean in a Bottle. New to this year's schedule are Telling Tall Tales, Creative Writing, Fabric Crafts, Hand Sewing, Rooms Crafts and Jewelry Making, Fun with Fossils, and Jelly Making.

"Another class we are excited to offer is Basics in Babysitting," Estlack said. "This course is taught by the American Red Cross and is graciously underwritten by the City of Clarendon in order to make it affordable for the students. The class is for anyone ages 11 to 15 and features training in first aid and home safety and is perfect for anyone interested in babysitting neighbors or relatives."

Students can be registered up until 3:00 p.m. the day before any class starts. The first classes start Monday, June 4, and classes will continue until Friday, June 29.

Flags at the Cemetery

By Dr. Paul Kengor

Like many Americans, Memorial Day never ceases to move me. Rivalled only by Christmas and Easter, it's the most poignant time of the year for me, maybe because, like Christmas and Easter, it's about life, death, and remembrance.

This Memorial Day, several images stick with me:

Recently, I was sitting at the waiting room at the nearby hospital, alternately reading something and checking email on my BlackBerry, consumed by my own little modern, technological world. Over to my left, I heard an elderly gentleman saying to another elderly gentleman, "Yes, I got there in 1943, ready to deploy to Italy...."

I looked over at the two of them. They were chatting amicably, calmly, quietly, un-ostentatiously. When the one finished a thought about the Italian campaign, the other picked up with his story about boarding a plane for Europe nearly 70 years ago.

The two men sat a few feet apart, two chairs between them. I was struck by how similar they looked. Each was probably late 80s, about 5'9", 160 pounds, apparent good shape, minds sharp as tacks, wearing trousers on a very hot day, baseball caps, legs crossed, arms bent atop the back of a chair. They looked like farmers, and probably were farmers in their youth before they headed off to World War II. They were mirror images physically, could be mistaken for brothers, but their resemblance was more than that: each possessed a sort of serenity, a peace. You had the sense that if the doctor told them they had just weeks to live, they'd shrug their shoulders and say, "Well, that's a tough break, Doc. But I can't complain."

When the one man was fetched by an attractive young nurse, he got up, smiled, and said to her, "Nice day outside, eh?"

Both had the comportment of the gentleman American farmer, the guys who, when called to duty, did their duty — a long time ago.

Like many of you reading this article, I've encountered these men frequently in my life, but increasingly less so. I'm in my mid-40s. I came across them much more often 20 years ago.

I recall another such instance in the early 1900s. I pulled off I-95 in rural Virginia, early in the morning. It was only my fiancé and I — before all the kids we have now. We stopped at a McDonald's. Sitting there was a group of old men. They were talking about "The Big One," about "W-W-Two." One was describing what it was like at the Battle of the Bulge, as the others listened intently.

I wonder about those men at that McDonald's in Virginia. Are they still alive? Perhaps half of them are, at best.

I'm struggling here to provide a picture of what I regrettably know is a dying breed, a special-American that my kids will not encounter in their mid-40s. What a loss that will be. These WWII vets are the essence of Americana. Norman Rockwell would have painted them for the Saturday Evening Post. And they are nearing extinction. Two decades from now, a handful will be left, and they won't be shooting the breeze in the hospital waiting room or local McDonald's.

That brings me to another image that sticks with me:

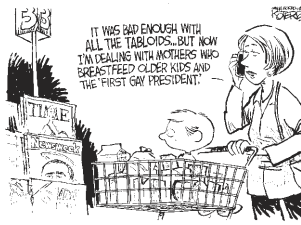

Speaking of Norman Rockwell, I live in a quintessential American small-town: the main street with the flags, trees, barber shops, old movie theatre, churches, and people who know your name. After you cross the railroad tracks to leave town, drive about three miles, you come to a cemetery. Whizzing past that cemetery on Memorial Day literally gives pause. It looks like every second or third tombstone is festooned with a tiny American flag. Could that be possible?

Sure, it could. My town (probably like yours) was founded in the 19th century. From then on, America's men went to war. From the Civil War to World War I to World War II to Korea to Vietnam, among other conflicts, each generation served and died. Most died years after getting home and starting families with their sweethearts. The flags at the cemetery bear witness.

Sadly, we're currently amid a period when we'll observe a palpable increase in the flags at the cemetery, and a corresponding decrease in the gentlemen talking about the war at the hospital or McDonald's. It's a process that's irreversible. There's nothing we mere mortals can do about it. It's in God's hands.

But there is something you can do. When you see these men, talk to them. Don't miss a golden, fleeting opportunity that your children and grandchildren will not get. Listen to them, enjoy them, and remember them.

Dr. Paul Kengor is professor of political science at Grove City College, executive director of The Center for Vision & Values, and author of the book, "The Communist: Frank Marshall Davis, The Untold Story of Barack Obama's Mentor."

America facing structural intolerance

Save the War of Independence and the War Between the States, we may be living in the most perilous time in our history. Much of our future prosperity or ruin will be determined by a national debate.

The country is divided when different people take different sides in a debate, and are intolerant of differing opinions. The country is really divided when different people are having entirely different debates, and refuse to recognize that two separate debates are happening. That's what's occurring on economic policy and government's role in that policy.

Folks on the left are having a one-sided debate how about to deal with the economic downturn. The prevailing argument you hear from these folks is that the economy is running well below capacity. To get it up to capacity, the government should borrow and spend more. The federal government is now running annual deficits of a little over a trillion dollars. Some of these folks think the deficit should be about 1.5 trillion dollars.

The progressives on the left rail against what they see as Republican economic misers who resist new borrowing.

Other people, on the far right, look at liberals and steam commences to erupt from their ears. They think the liberals are all to bankrupt the country and destroy it through excessive debt. They think the federal government should provide for the national defense and stay out of the way. They propose that the government should cut spending, cut taxes, and cut oppressive regulations. Good times will then surely follow.

Neither side can leave their ideological silos long enough to see that from the dawn of the republic, the federal government has played a vital role in American economic life. Government promoted industrial development in the 1700s, transportation in the 1800s, communications in the 1900s, and biotechnology today.

But the federal role has historically been limited. The man who created that role, Alexander Hamilton, was a nationalist. His primary directive, from George Washington, was to enhance national power and prominence, not to make individuals rich or equal.

Hamilton's version of economic nationalism meant that he and the people who followed in his course focused on long-term structural development, not on providing jobs right now. They had their vision on the future, building the infrastructure, education and research facilities required for long-term prosperity. This nationalism also led later generations of national leaders to assume that there is a rough harmony of interests between capital and labor.

Hamilton's nationalism meant that federal policy emphasized energy and opportunity, more than security, fairness, and ease. His idea on the function of the U.S. government was focused more on innovation and education.

Because of these priorities, and these limits on the federal role, the government could be energetic without ever becoming massive. Throughout the 1800s, the federal government expended about 4 percent of the national gross domestic product. Even through the New Deal, it expended less than 10%.

As a result, America prospered. Unfortunately, the Hamiltonian approach has been discarded. The desertion happened in three phases. Firstly came the progressive era of Theodore Roosevelt. The progressives were right to increase regulations to protect workers and consumers. But the late progressives had excessive faith in the power of government planners to rationalize national life. This was the opposite of the Hamiltonian tradition, which was much more skeptical about how much we can know, and much more respectful toward the complexity of the world.

the quick, the dead, & fred by fred gray

Secondly came the New Deal of Franklin D. Roosevelt. He was correct to aggressively react to the Great Depression. But the New Deal's maxim — that people don't eat in the long run; they eat every day — was eventually too harsh. Politicians since have paid less attention to long-term structures and more to how many jobs they "create" in a specific month. We have been corrupted by the allure of debt, sacrificing future development for the sake of present spending and tax cuts.

Lastly came Lyndon Baines Johnson's Great Society. Johnson was right to use government to do more to protect Americans from the misfortunes of capitalism and racial inequality. But he went too far and tried to bind voters to the Democratic Party with a web of social programs.

In each case, a good idea was taken to excess. A government that was energetic and limited was turned into one that is vague and fiscally unsustainable. A government that was trusted and oriented around long-term visions is now distrusted because it tries to pander to the voters' every momentary want. A government that devoted its resources toward future innovation and development now devotes its resources to health care for the middle-class elderly.

We need to have a serious debate about the future role of our government, and yet our leaders carry on separate debates while disparaging each other. Does government encourage long-term innovation or leave behind long-term debt for short-term expenditure? Does government nurture an enterprising citizenry or a secure but less energetic one?

The question is not whether government is inherently good or evil, but what government does.

Buckling up simple way to save lives

By Carol Rawson, Director, TxDOT Traffic Operations Division

All of us are faced with hundreds, if not thousands, of decisions every day. Most don't involve life or death matters, but there is one simple decision that does have life-altering consequences. Choosing to wear a seat belt every time you're in a vehicle is one of those decisions. It's one act that can save your life or the life of someone you love. And it's also the law.

Whether you're the driver or a passenger sitting in the front seat or the back, Texas law now requires everyone in a vehicle to be secured by a seat belt. Children under the age of 8 must be in a child safety seat or booster seat unless they are taller than 4 feet 9 inches.

Most Texans are buckling up, thanks to the Texas Department of Transportation's annual Click It or Ticket safety campaign. Every May, thousands of local law enforcement agencies join the Texas Department of Public Safety to ticket anyone who isn't wearing a seat belt or whose children aren't properly secured.

The threat of getting an expensive citation has been a powerful motivator to get more drivers and passengers to buckle up. Since the Click It or Ticket campaign began eleven years ago, the state's seat belt use rate has steadily climbed, and now almost 94 percent of motorists in Texas buckle up. The net effect is fewer deaths and injuries. TxDOT's crash statistics indicate that 95 percent of the 778,448 Texans involved in crashes in 2010 where there were no injuries were wearing seat belts.

Texas now ranks seventh in the nation for seat belt use. In spite of all the progress we've made, one group of motorists remains significantly less likely to buckle up. That group is pickup truck drivers and passengers. Since roughly one out of every four vehicles registered in Texas is a pickup truck and pickups are twice as likely as passenger vehicles to roll over in a crash, that's cause for concern.

According to a recent study by the Texas Transportation Institute, only 80 percent of pickup truck passengers buckle up. Compare that to the more than 90 percent of passengers in all other types of vehicles who regularly put on their seat belts. The National Highway Traffic Safety Administration reports that half of pickup drivers who died in traffic crashes in 2010 were not wearing a seat belt.

Not buckling up doesn't make sense — financial or otherwise. While a ticket for not wearing a seat belt can cost anywhere from $25 to $250 plus court costs that drive up the expense even more, drivers and passengers who do not wear seat belts put themselves at risk for the greatest cost of all — serious injury or death. Depending on the type of vehicle, wearing a seat belt reduces the risk of fatal injury by up to 60 percent.

For motorists who need the extra incentive to buckle up, law enforcement will be out in force on Texas streets and highways between May 21 and June 3 — including the Memorial Day holiday weekend — looking for and issuing a citation to drivers and passengers who aren't wearing seat belts. It comes down to this: if you're not buckled up, expect to pay up.

It doesn't matter what kind of vehicle you're in. It doesn't matter where you're sitting. It doesn't matter if it's day or night. The smart choice is to buckle up, every time, everywhere, and to make sure everyone in your vehicle does the same. Buckling up is the one simple decision that all of us can make every day to save not only our own lives but also those of our loved ones.

Click It or Ticket. It's the law.

SBA, AARP team up to start businesses

WASHINGTON – The U.S. Small Business Administration and AARP are launching a strategic alliance to provide counseling and training to entrepreneurs over the age of 50 who want to start or grow a small business. Through SBA's online training courses and its nationwide network of business mentors and counselors, the two organizations expect to train 100,000 "encore entrepreneurs," men and women over 50 who are starting or running a small business.

"No matter what your age, if you have an idea or a business that's ready to move to the next level, the SBA wants to make sure you have access to the tools you need to start and grow," said SBA Administrator Karen Mills.

"We know that working side-by-side with AARP, we will be able to reach baby boomers and Americans over the age of 50 who have years of professional experience working for others and are ideally positioned to step out and become their own boss. And, in doing so, they will become job creators and drivers of economic growth in their communities."

SBA has set up a dedicated web page Americans over the age of 50 featuring: an online self-assessment tool that will help potential small business owners understand their readiness for starting a business as well as information to help with business planning, shaping a winning business idea, professional counseling, financial services and information to find local resources in your area. This web page can be found at: <http://www.sba.gov/content/50-entrepreneurs>.

SBA and AARP also will jointly develop and host a customized online course, self-assessment, and webinar series for older entrepreneurs. SBA already offers a suite of online courses for people who want to start and grow their business. To take a course, go to <http://www.sba.gov/training> under "online courses." Course topics include start-up basics, finance strategies, marketing tactics, overseas trade, and more.

For more than 70 million Americans over 50, business ownership is a practical option. It can be a second career or a chance to leverage life experiences into an interesting and financially practical "encore" career.

"Many baby boomers are working beyond retirement age and choosing to stay active and engaged in the workforce," Mills said. "For many older entrepreneurs, starting a small business can be an opportunity to transform a lifetime hobby or interest or years of professional experience into a lucrative line of work."

For more information on SBA's programs and services, please visit www.sba.gov.

The Clarendon Lions Club held its regular Tuesday noon meeting May 29 with Boss Lion Steve Hall in charge.

We had 14 members and four guests this week – Past District Gov. Bill Auvenshine and Scarlet, Nathan, and Daniel Estlack.

Lion Mike Word presented the program on the Snack Pak 4 Kids program which provides healthy snacks over the weekend to elementary age children who might not have other sources of food for those days. The program operates in several Panhandle communities and was founded by Clarendon High School graduate Dyron Howell. The cost to provide weekend snacks is about $135 per kid per school year, and Lion Word said $4,000 would operate the program in Clarendon for a school year. The club voted to donate $135 to the program, and others interested in supporting Snack Pak 4 Kids can visit snackpak4kids.org.

There being no further business, we were adjourned.

What does 4-H mean to you and your family?

By Laura Hommel, Donley 4-H Club Manager

What does 4-H mean to our family? 4-H is our livelihood!

Our family calendar revolves around daily activities with 4-H. Besides our involvement with church/youth, 4-H is our lifeline to a successful future for our children.

The skills that my kids have learned though 4-H is the skills they will use the rest of their lives. Through 4-H my son can now arti-ficially inseminate his cows, judge, and evaluate his own herd.

My daughter can make her own outfit by designing and sewing pieces of fabric together. They both have learned how to cook, balance their own checkbook, and have become leaders in their 4-H club and community.

So the real question should be how in the world could my family function without 4-H!

They're not hip or modern.

lamey or fashionable.

They no longer fit your prescription.

Or your style.

But for one person living in a developing country, these used eyeglasses will put the world in focus. Maybe for the very first time.

Don't throw away someone's chance for a clearer tomorrow.

Donate your used eyeglasses at The Enterprise.

Facebook scam fakes account cancellation notice

Facebook users, watch out. A clever scam in the form of a fake account cancellation email is making the rounds, and it's easy to get fooled. Don't let the threat of losing your account trick you into install-ing malware on your computer. How the Scam Works: The scam starts with a suspicious email inform-ing Facebook users that they have received an "account cancellation request," reports computer security blog Naked Security. Recipients are urged to follow a link to cancel the request.

What the scam looks like: Hi [email address]

We are sending you this email to inform you that we have received an account cancellation request from you. Please follow the link below to confirm or cancel this request

Thanks, The Facebook Team

To confirm or cancel this request, follow the link below: click here

Our correspondent was right to be suspicious. The link doesn't point to an official Facebook page, but a third-party application running on the Facebook platform. Of course, that means that the link does go to a facebook.com address - something might fool those who are not cau-tious. The first thing you're likely to encounter if you did click on the link is a mes-sage asking you if you want to allow an unknown Java applet to run on your computer.

And it seems they're pretty insis-tent that you allow it.. If you hit the "No thanks" button they'll just carry on pestering you to allow the Java

Daughters of the Confederacy met on May 8

Hedley gathered at Rowe Cemetery for Memorial Day

Hope everyone had a wonder-ful Memorial Day, and thanks to all Veterans we are still able to have one. May God Bless them each and every one. By the time you read this, Hedley will have had their Memorial Day gathering at the Rowe Ceme-tery. It is always a pleasure to go and celebrate our Veterans past and present. Without them we would not be free to do the things we enjoy doing.

We also had a "cemetery clean up day" on Saturday and the Hedley Lions Club served lunch to all who helped. The Hedley Methodist Youth Group Bake Sales were great. Thanks to all who participated. We earned enough money to send four kids to camp.

CHS students do well at State UIL contests

Clarendon High School students were very successful at state UIL academic meet this spring.

The Number Sense team of Hyungmo Jung, Jordan Luna, Nathan Dziedzic, and Jerami Johnson placed 3rd at the UIL State Academic Meet in Austin. Jung was 8th place overall and Luna 9th.

This completes a historic year for the team as they qualified for their first trip to Austin after winning district and regional competitions. Jung also finished a stellar year in Mathematics competition by winning the bronze medal in that event. His score would have made him a state champion in 2A classification, and the contest director said he'd never seen scores this high in 1A state math competition before.

Lydia Howard competed in two events, and brought home the state gold medal in Headline Writing. Howard had a superb year in the event, winning district and placing 3rd in regional competition to go along with her 1st place state finish. She also competed in the Science contest.

These students represented Clarendon High School very well, and sponsors are proud of their accomplishments.

Texas named a leading state for small business

AUSTIN – In recognition of National Small Business Week, Texas Workforce Commissioner Representing Employers Tom Pauken shared some good news about our state's positive climate for small businesses.

Texas ranked No. 2 in the nation for friendliness toward small businesses, just behind Oklahoma, and is the sixth-easiest place to start a small enterprise, according to a new survey promoted by Thumbtack.com.

This encouraging, two-month study of 6,022 small businesses comes on the heels of good news on the Texas jobs front – a 6.9 percent unemployment rate in April, down from 8 percent a year ago. Texas continues to trend well below the national unemployment rate of 8.1 percent.

"Having been a small businessman myself, this is great news for those contemplating setting up shop in Texas," Commissioner Pauken said. "We're 430,000 small businesses strong, and we hope to welcome thousands more new startups in the near future."

Thumbtack.com, a national online business linking more than 250,000 small businesses with potential clients, cooperated with the Kauffman Foundation to craft the survey. The survey ranked states along 15 metrics. Texas scored "A" grades in nine of the categories. Among the questions asked, the survey had business owners rate the "friendliness" of state government toward small business.

Honor students

Clarendon High School graduates Jordan Luna, Trevela Dronzek, and Wesley Williams received high honors during the annual commencement exercises last Friday evening. Luna was named as the recipient of the Knorrp Cup Award, Dronzek was recognized as the Best Girl Athlete, and Williams received the Fighting Heart Award.

WHICH WOULD YOU RATHER BE LOOKING AT THIS SUMMER?

A D.W.I. turns summer into bummer. There's jail time, up to $17,000 in fines, hours of community service, and very likely a suspended driver license. Before you head out for summer fun, line up a P.A.S.S.—that's a Person Appointed to Stay Sober. That way, you'll get a safe ride home and not get burned by a D.W.I.
