2 Dr. Newbury talks about the great Blue Bell drought of 2015.

3 Plans are laid out for the annual Saints' Roost Celebration next week.

4 Bob warns of new scams involving grandkids, the IRS, and Microsoft.

8 And CC names its spring honor students.

All this and much more as The Enterprise reports in this week's amazing edition!

Enterprise receives state press awards

THE CLARENDON ENTERPRISE received eight recognitions during the Texas Press Association's summer conference in Austin last weekend.

This year 140 newspapers submitted 1.490 entries in the contest, which was judged by the Maryland Delaware DC Press Association. The contest is broken down into 10 divisions in which newspapers compete against papers of similar circulation size.

The local paper earned second place honors for Editorials on the effects of religious signs and for championing open meetings and public information. Judges described Roger Estlack's editorial on the first subject as "a smart look at the intersection of freedom of speech, freedom of religion, and the bottom line," and said the editorial on the second topic "a classic example that clearly highlights the absurdity" of the situation.

The ENTERPRISE also received second place honors for Sports Coverage, third place for Feature Photos, third place for Headline Writing, third place for News Photos, fourth place for Column Writing, and fourth place for Page Design.

Regents name Adams to take Selvidge's seat

Hedley ISD ag instructor Lon Adams was appointed to the Clarendon College Board of Regents during a called meeting Monday morning, June 22.

Regents met in closed session briefly before electing Adams to fill the unexpired term of the late Tex Selvidge.

"Lon comes with a tremendous background in education," Board Chairman Jerry Woodard said. "His background, his community involvement, and his experience as an ex-student will enhance our board."

Adams will be sworn-in at the board's July. His term will expire next May.

In other college business, the Regents held their regular meeting last Thursday, June 18, in the Pampa ISD board room.

Among the items considered on the board's short agenda, a contract with Interquest Canine Detection services was renewed, and a bid on tax delinquent property in Howardwick was accepted.

Regents approved a $5 per hour increase in tuition and adopted course fees as presented. President Robert Riza said the increases keep CC in line with other colleges and yet still below that of Vernon College and Frank Phillips in Borger.

The board ratified the employment of Michele Lockharts as an administrative assistant in Childress, Susan Russell as the associate dean of financial aid, and Gatlin Duncan as assistant rodeo coach and ranch horse coach. The resignation of Elena Valdez as the nursing administrative assistant was also acknowledged.

Chamber asks for help during parade

The Clarendon Chamber of Commerce is looking for people with golf carts or ATVs with seating for four or more to help before and after the July 4 Herring Bank Parade.

The Chamber would like to furnish rides to and from parking areas for those attendees that have difficulty walking. If you have such a vehicle and would like to loan it to the Chamber or especially if you would also like to pilot the vehicle, please go by the Clarendon Visitor Center at the Mulkey Theatre or call parade chairman Bob Weiss at 205-0270.

City urges citizens to mow grass, weeds

Clarendon City Hall continues to remind citizens of the need to mow grass and weeks that are more than 18 inches tall.

City officials say they understand how this year's rains have been a boost to local plantlife, but they ask for the citizens' cooperation keeping the town attractive.

For more information about the

to refugees

By Alex Nowrasteh, Cato Institute

According to the United Nations, a refugee is somebody who has fled his country of citizenship and will not return because of a well-founded fear of persecution for reasons of race, religion, nationality, political opinion or membership in a social group. Refugees have played an important role in American history, but for most of that time, there was no legal distinction in our laws between economic immigrants and refugees.

Prior to the 20th century, the most intense emigration was of Jews escaping Eastern Europe, beginning in about 1881. Although many came for economic reasons, the scale of their emigration was due to oppression and frequent pogroms. Annual Jewish emigration from 1900 to 1913 was equal to about 2 percent of the entire Jewish population in Eastern Europe and Russia. Congress should have known about the perils faced by Jews in Europe, but it did nothing to take account of them when closing America's traditional open door.

After World War II, American policymakers created a refugee and asylum law. It was partly an admission that the 1920s immigration restrictions were inhumane and partly a nod to Cold War politics. Every refugee from a communist country was further evidence that the U.S. and her Western allies were superior to the Soviet system. There's evidence that Congress reformed other American immigration laws for propaganda reasons.

An anti-communist uprising in Hungary led to an exodus of highly skilled and educated refugees in the mid- to late 1950s. There was already a sizeable Hungarian-American population to help them integrate. After Fidel Castro took over Cuba in 1959, the so-called "golden exiles" fled to the United States. Those largely wealthy and educated refugees were then followed by waves of less skilled Cubans in the 1970s, 1980s and 1990s. A special law called the "wet feet, dry feet policy" allowed Cubans who made it to American soil to stay.

Those later waves of Cubans were met by many of their former countrymen, who had already settled and integrated into American society. There was some animosity between the new arrivals and the settled group, but also a lot of aid for the new arrivals.

The current crises are affecting even more people today. Syrian refugees recently streamed through the border in Turkey. Nine hundred refugees drowned in the Mediterranean trying to escape the chaos of Africa and the Middle East. About 1 percent of world refugees are resettled in developed nations, but the rest languish in refugee camps in places like Lebanon, where a quarter of that country's population are now refugees from the Syrian civil war and the Islamic State in Iraq and Syria (ISIS).

About 4 million Syrians were forced out of the country by the conflict. Since October 2014, the United States has let in just 800 Syrian refugees. There are security concerns with Syrian refugees and the government needs to thoroughly review their individual backgrounds before allowing them to settle Greatly marginalized, that's what, the Blue Bell nation insists.

The company's leaders – with a long history of getting it right – assure us that soon, all will be right again. This means millions who are "Blue Bell dependent" will be lifting spoons and loosening belts once more, prospective weight gain be hanged.

At some venues - such as at Globe Life Park in Arlington – where the Texas Rangers sometimes play baseball - signs apologize for Blue Bell's absence; instead, a substitute is offered. (Never mind the cost; hey, it's the old ballgame.)...

Grumps – with popular hamburger hang-outs in Burleson, Granbury, Cleburne and Stephenville - has long featured Blue Bell, and its absence has presented challenges.

Their clever signage remains in place, "heavy on the blue." At the ice for "Bell." Most have accepted the

They, too, are out to win and keep customers - both with frozen custard treats and consistent, genuine effort to earn public trust.

Take the issue of customers with nut allergies, a condition our granddaughter Juliana has faced courageously since age two. This 12-year-old – and others with allergies - know that too often, their allergies are misunderstood, sometimes even treated casually. Andy's personnel are quick to open new containers, as well as avoid contact with nuts and residue.... *****

It turns out that visits to Andy's have led to expansion of my vocabulary.

Recently at the drive-through, I ordered for a carload of family members. I didn't comprehend the attendant's question; I thought it sounded like, "Do you want puppacones?" Twice I asked her to repeat the question, since I'd never heard of "puppacones" before.

"For the two pets in the back seat," she explained. "Most pets like our free puppy cones."

Our two rescue dogs – Sadie and Sailor – wagged their tails. Now, when we visit Tyler, they bark when in the vicinity of Andy's.... *****

In short, folks at the helm at businesses such as these are "good 'uns," 100 percent dedicated to "meeting muster" in product satisfaction and safety.

They operate in the manner suggested on a restaurant sign on the wall at Highland Village in Alpine a half-century ago: "There ain't hardly any business got these days that ain't went out after."

We could easily challenge the grammar, but the message is "right on." Further, an adage reminds that we can "shear sheep many times, but can only skin 'em once." Though our dogs don't savvy such lingo, their eyes at full sparkle and their tails at full wag tell me they regard puppy cones as the best treats they ever lapped lips over.... *****

the burger race. With license plates adorning walls easily passes the "down home" test. the world looks level. Yep, Grumps would have to add spittoons to look here, but more should be allowed to do so.

Settling here is just the first step; assimilation and integration are also important. Fortunately, past success bodes well for current groups.

Refugees who came between 1975 and 1980 originally started with lower incomes and fewer skills than economic migrants. But by 1990s, those refugees were making 20 percent more income and improved their language skills more than economic migrants. Refugees cannot return to their homeland like many economic migrants do, so many make serious longterm commitments to learn English and other relevant skills.

The goal of the Office of Refugee Resettlement is economic self-sufficiency - refugees working and supporting themselves without public assistance. That is a worthy goal, but more strict denials of meanstested welfare or blocking it entirely for refugees can speed up integration.

Fewer welfare benefits mean that refugees more rapidly enter the labor market, search for jobs and work with Americans on a daily basis. Work boosts self-confidence, which increases refugee satisfaction and contentment with their new homes. A growing economy combined with smaller welfare benefits in Richmond, Va. helped to rapidly integrate that city's refugee population in the 1980s and 1990s.

American taxpayers shouldn't be forced to foot the bill. Refugees have access to some meanstested welfare benefits before other immigrants do; that should end. Churches, charities and mutual aid associations should fulfill that responsibility.

There are over 150,000 Americans of Syrian descent, with a median household income of over $65,000, compared to about $53,000 for native-born Americans. They can help ease Syrian refugees into life in the United States. It's enough for the U.S. government to allow more peaceful Syrians who have passed through national security, criminal and health checks to settle here - the government should not, and does not, need to support them.

June 20 marks World Refugee Day. But this week saw another anniversary: One-hundred thirty years ago, the Statue of Liberty arrived in New York. At the statue's base, the famous words "Give me your tired, your poor/Your huddled masses yearning to breathe free," are followed by "Send these, the homeless, tempest-tossed to me." The present refugee crisis and America's historical commitment to humanitarian immigration should impel us to allow more of them to settle here.

Real works begins on trafficking

By Sen. John Cornyn and Rep. Ted Poe

Chained to a bed in a warehouse. Branded like cattle. Set on fire. These are just some of the horrific stories we've heard from women who have suffered as victims of human trafficking here in Texas.

Human trafficking is modernday slavery, plain and simple. Sadly, according to the National Human Trafficking Resource Center, Texas has the second-highest number of reported incidents of human trafficking in the country. While this horrific underground industry has been hidden for years in plain sight, the good news is that efforts to fight it are growing across the nation, and Texas is on the front lines.

Last week we had the opportunity to visit the Letot Center, a rehabilitation facility in Dallas where we saw firsthand what can happen when government officials, law enforcement officers, nonprofits and concerned citizens join forces to restore the lives of human trafficking victims. We were joined by advocates from the nonprofit New Friends New Life, an organization that provides job training, financial assistance, life skills coaching and special programs to address the challenges that survivors and their families face. With the addition of a brand-new all-female facility, the Letot Center and groups like New Friends New Life not only provide a safe home for trafficking survivors, but also help arm them with the resources to rebuild their lives.

One brave survivor we met was Amanda Jones, who became a victim of human trafficking after she was kidnapped in Dallas at the age of 15. For nine long years, she lived in terror as she was repeatedly sold for sex. Through the New Friends New Life's holistic approach - which addresses the physical, mental and spiritual needs of victims -Amanda and her daughter are now living proof that there is hope for trafficking survivors fighting abuse, addiction or poverty.

As former judges, we strongly believe in not only punishing the people who commit these horrendous crimes, but also helping victims rebuild their lives. And as fathers, we refuse to sit back while children are being bought and sold in our own state. That's why we authored the Justice for Victims of Trafficking Act – to provide law enforcement with new tools to apprehend those who commit these heinous crimes, and to provide resources for restoration for the survivors. We're proud that this bipartisan bill has been signed by the president and is now the law of the land.

Under our legislation, a special fund will be created to help these victims get the shelter and services they need, providing them with a fresh start. The law ensures that those who have been sold into slavery are treated as victims rather than as criminals. The legislation will also strengthen law enforcement tools to take down all human traffickers and the organized criminal networks supporting them. Finally, the law targets the predators who purchase trafficked women.

Partnerships on the federal, state and local level will be instrumental in eradicating these crimes. We must do everything possible to support survivors like Amanda to break the cycle of exploitation, overcome the pain of their experiences and start a new life. We can achieve this if organizations like New Friends New Life and facilities like the Letot Center have the tools and resources they need to serve every victim who comes through their doors.

The Justice for Victims of Trafficking Act will help us accomplish this, and we will continue fighting to ensure that this new law is fully enforced and implemented.

Here's what to do: Look for water stains, mildew, sand or silt under the carpet, floor mats, and dashboard, and in the wheel well where the spare is stored. Look for fogging inside the headlights and taillights. Do a smell test. A heavy aroma of cleaners and disinfectants is a sign that someone's trying to mask a mold or odor problem.

their Tuesday noon meeting June 23, 2015, for a fajita lunch. We had 18 members and one guest - Cassidy Riza, guest of Lion Robert Riza. Boss Lion Larry Capranica led the meeting.

Lion John Howard reported that some materials have been donated to repair county roads. Cases were being resolved with such speed that Lion Judge Howard had time to hang holiday bunting and banners.

Lion Riza reported that the college has been recognized for excellence and is hosting more than 350 high school students for the FFA Leadership Camp this week.

Lion Roger Estlack was fined but persisted in showing off the Chamber of Commerce's five-dollar courthouse coffee mugs. He presented the first one to Lion Judge Howard.

We will have a sign-up sheet next week to volunteer time to serve at the Fourth of July celebration.

Lion Jack King presented our program and brought gifts from the Clarendon EDC... pens and notepads that are available at the Visitor Center. Check out what's going on at ClarendonEDC.org. The CEDC has been making façade grants and working on recruiting businesses to town.

There being no further business, we dismissed to spread cheer and Lionism throughout our fair county.

Another Benefit of Botox Injections

Preliminary research presented at the annual meeting for the Heart Rhythm Society in Boston revealed the results of a study showing that Botox (onabotulinumtoxin A) reduced irregular heart rhythm after a common form of open-heart surgery. Atrial fibrillation is a dangerous, irregular heart rhythm that spontaneously occurs in some people after coronary artery bypass graft surgeries. Atrial fibrillation increases the risk for conditions such as stroke. The clinical trial in two hospitals had sixty enrolled patients. When Botox was injected into the fat pads that surround the outer part of the heart, only seven percent of patients experienced atrial fibrillatin after the surgery compared to thirty percent of patients who did not get Botox. In the eleven months after the surgery, more individuals in the non-Botox group experienced episodes of atrial fibrillation compared to zero episodes in the Botox group.

Botox (onabotulinumtoxin A) is an injectable, prescription medication that is often used cosmetically to reduce wrinkles and frown lines in the face. Common side effects include drooping eyelid, swelling of the eyelid, dry mouth, and pain at the injections site.

Texas balking as federal climate rules loom

By Jim Malewitz, The Texas Tribune

Texas' Republican leadership clearly disdains President Obama's landmark proposal to combat climate change by slashing carbon emissions, and Attorney General Ken Paxton has announced plans to sue over the rules.

But with the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency planning to finalize its Clean Power Plan in August, top officials still won't say whether Texas will flout those rules an option that some critics call risky.

"There's no decision that's been made," Bryan Shaw, chairman of the Texas Commission on Environmental Quality, the agency that would be charged with implementing the rules, told The Texas Tribune on Monday. "It's difficult to know what to plan for without knowing the rule."

Shaw made the comment after speaking at a Texas Public Policy Foundation event aiming to poke holes in the federal plan, which, as written, would require the state to cut close to 200 billion pounds of carbon dioxide emissions in the next two decades however it sees fit.

The EPA suggests Texas could meet that goal through a combination of actions called "building blocks": making coal plants more ence, drawing laughs. efficient, switching to cleaner-burning natural gas, adding more renewable resources and bolstering energy efficiency. Under the proposal, Texas could also adopt a "cap-and-trade" program – a scheme in which companies bid on the right to pollute.

Environmental and health advocates say limiting the greenhouse gas would help fight climate change, bolster public health and conserve water in parched Texas, and they suggest that opponents are exaggerating the economic burdens.

Texas Republicans have loudly panned the federal requirement, which they say would increase prices and threaten reliability on the electric grid, and Monday's discussion at the powerful conservative group's headquarters provided no exception.

Paxton, who keynoted the event, called the looming rules "an example of the president forcing through what he could not accomplish legislatively" and part of his "war on coal and fossil fuels." He suggested that they would unleash uncertainty across the Texas economy.

"You can't spell unpredictability without EPA," he told the audi-

But asked whether Texas would - or should - refuse to follow the risky. rules, Paxton was noncommittal.

ture, and what they want to do. My goal is to go and fight them in the courts and win," he told reporters.

So far, the Legislature, which wrapped up business June 1, has done nothing except reject all proposals instructing Texas regulators to construct a climate plan. Lawmakers aren't scheduled to meet again until January of 2017, likely giving them little time to submit a plan to the EPA before a deadline.

Under the current proposal, Texas would have one year to comply once the rules are final. Shaw said his agency would struggle to cobble together a plan within that time frame, even though it has had a year to digest a proposal. Shaw said Texas has taken 18-months to a year to implement a "typical" federal rule, and called this one particularly complex.

If Texas ignores the rules – and loses its likely legal challenge – the EPA would construct its own plan which states that greenhouse gases for Texas, though the agency has not are a danger to public health and said what that might look like. Critics have called that strategy

"We are an energy leader, both "I leave that up to the Legisla- in fossil fuels and renewables, and our plan will look nothing like a onesize-fits-all plan that would likely be imposed on the state," said Rep. Rafael Anchia, D-Dallas, who led the unsuccessful push to construct a climate plan, in a recent interview. "It's bad for Texas business and we are abdicating our responsibility."

> The last time Texas refused to follow climate rules, the regulations involved "greenhouse gas permits" needed to build facilities. Without those permits, companies couldn't build large industrial plants, prompting an outcry.

> Texas has fared poorly in its lawsuits against the Obama administration's climate regulations, litigation that has cost the state more than $400,000, according to the attorney general's office. In 2013, the Supreme Court declined to hear the state's appeals in two cases it had lost in lower courts: a challenge to the EPA's "endangerment finding," welfare, and a challenge to rules that limit greenhouse gas emissions from vehicles

The Supreme Court also largely struck down Texas' challenge to the EPA's regulation of greenhouse gases from large industrial plants in June of 2014. And the state lost its battle against a different environmental rule, aimed at limiting air pollution that crosses state lines, in the Supreme Court in April of last year.

On Monday, Paxton said, "I'm always worried about risk, but in that particular case, we plan on fighting it in court, and we plan on winning."

Opponents of the federal rules suggest that this legal challenge would be different, because the rules reach farther than others have, dealing with the makeup of the state's electric portfolio, rather than just the equipment power plants run on - potentially overstepping authority under the Clean Air Act.

"This is unprecedented," Mike Nasi, an attorney representing the energy industry, said at the conservative event. "Never have we had somebody try to contort the Clean Air Act in such a way."

Poll: Texans divided on guns, discrimination

By Ross Ramsey, The Texas Tribune

Many groups face discrimination in the U.S., Texas voters say, but they don't always agree on who faces it most, according to the latest University of Texas/Texas Tribune Poll. And in the wake of months of gun violence, Texans remain supportive of looser restrictions on where and when people can carry handguns in the state, the poll found.

Discrimination

Transgender people, Muslims, gays and lesbians, and African-Americans – in that order – face the most discrimination, Texas voters sav. They're followed, in order, by Hispanics, women, Christians, Asians, whites and men. But the differences from one group of respondents to another were very different.

"There is an enormous divide here," said Daron Shaw, co-director of the poll and a government professor at the University of Texas at Austin.

While 72 percent of all respondents said there is either "a lot" or Tea Party Republicans (62 percent) "some" discrimination against Muslims in the U.S., only 49 percent of voters who identified themselves as Tea Party Republicans thought so. Abbott ousts Planned Parenthood from cancer program

By Alexa Ura, The Texas Tribune

A months-long effort to keep Republicans from pushing Planned Parenthood out of a state cancer screening program for low-income women ended in defeat on Saturday when Republican Gov. Greg Abbott signed off on the proposal.

By approving the two-year state budget, Abbott green-lit a provision that will prevent Planned Parenthood from participating in the joint statefederal Breast and Cervical Cancer Services program, which provides cancer screening for poor, uninsured women in Texas. The governor's endorsement of the provision, which was expected, came as Planned Parenthood leaders vowed to maintain their presence in Texas despite lawmakers' efforts to cut their funding.

"It's really incredible how low the governor and some of the state legislators will go when you start throwing women out of cancer screening programs and making it impossible for them to continue to go get services where they have before," Cecile Richards, president of Planned Parenthood Federation of America, said in an interview with Richards joined Sadie Hernandez, Planned Parenthood from the cancer The Texas Tribune on Saturday.

The governor's office did not immediately respond to a request for Parenthood received from the cancer comment on the budget provision.

Planned Parenthood currently serves about 10 percent of the Texas women in the program. In fiscal year 2014, Planned Parenthood affiliates received about $1.2 million in funding and served 2,938 of the 33,599 women who received services from Breast and Cervical Cancer Services providers across the state.

Some of the targeted clinics may still receive cancer screening funding if the state is unable to find other eligible providers in certain regions. Richards, who was in Texas on Saturday to rally against the cuts, called the ousting of Planned Parenthood from the program the "crassest example" of Texas lawmakers playing politics with women's access to health care.

for her filibuster of strict abortion regulations.

Cutting off the money Planned screening program is a major win for Texas conservatives who have likened directing any state funds to Planned Parenthood affiliates to endorsing abortion.

Joe Pojman, executive director of anti-abortion group Texas Alliance for Life, said the budget provision was a "big victory" for his group, which lobbied for the measure.

"We think the money is far better spent on the numerous alternative providers that are available throughout Texas," Pojman said. "I dont think that [Planned Parenthood] will be missed at all when they leave the program, because there's such a vast network of providers — many of whom provide a far higher level of services "

The state budget ousting islature in 2011 slashed the state's budget for family planning by twothirds in an effort to keep health providers even loosely affiliated with abortion providers, namely Planned Parenthood, from receiving state tax dollars. Ejecting Planned Parenthood from the joint state-federal Medicaid Women's Health Program cost the state a $9-to-$1 match from the federal government. That forced state health officials to relaunch the program as the state-financed Texas Women's Health Program to keep Planned Parenthood out.

But some Planned Parenthood affiliates continued to receive dollars from the Breast and Cervical Cancer Services program, which is primarily funded by federal money. In fiscal year 2014, funding for the program included $7.8 million from the federal government and $2.4 million from the state.

Richards said that despite the Legislature's efforts to force Planned Parenthood out of Texas, her organization is working to expand its footprint in the state.

"Planned Parenthood is comproviding care for the next century," The Breast and Cervical Cancer Richards said. "I think Texas has
